

New Greek Curse Tablets (1985–2000)

D. R. Jordan

In memory of William H. Willis

IN 1985 I presented in this journal “A Survey of Greek Defixiones not included in the Special Corpora” (SGD), in which I listed, with bibliography, all the Greek lead curse tablets known to me to have been edited or announced elsewhere than in DTWii (1897) and DTAud (1904).¹ Those edited numbered 189. Since that survey, the number has grown by about a hundred. The time has come for a supplementary list.²

“Defixiones, more commonly known as curse tablets, are inscribed sheets of lead, usually in the form of small, thin sheets, intended to influence, by supernatural means, the actions or welfare of persons or animals against their will.” Thus the opening of SGD. There seems to be no doubt that the description fits the strictly magical texts in that list, but one may wonder whether all of them, particularly the “prayers for justice” (Versnel 1991), should be called defixiones, a term that, despite its language, does not apply to examples from the Roman period, which are generally without nails. I have therefore chosen here the less learned “curse tablets,” aware that fault can be found with it too. In addition, there now seems no reason to exclude tablets on material other than lead: 115 is a sheet of selenite, a translucent crystallized gypsum. “New” in the title, I should add, includes examples that I failed, through oversight, to include in SGD.

¹Bibliographical abbreviations are to be found at the end of this article.

²For telling me of bibliography and of unpublished inscriptions that I should otherwise have missed I thank Ioannis Akamatis, Judith Binder, Barbara Burrell, Anastasios Christidis, Jaime Curbera, Sarah Gaffino, Jean Gasco, Florent Heintz, Athina Kaloyeropoulou, and Gabriella Ottone; I thank Dr Curbera too for allowing me to use the manuscript of his own survey (now Curbera 1999) of Sicilian curse tablets: see Appendix II for cross-references. Those who may find the present list helpful should bear in mind that it could not have been thought of without BÉp, EpB, and SEG and that we owe much to their compilers.

The arrangement of the list is geographical, as before, beginning with Greece in the order of IG; Hungary follows, then Sicily, Italy, the rest of the Mediterranean counterclockwise from France through Palestine-Syria, then Cyprus and the Black Sea. An individual entry consists, where they are known, of present LOC(ation), with inventory number, PROV(enance), DATE, BIBL(iography), and descriptions of TAB(let) and of TEXT. For the bibliography, I use the conventions of SGD:

- X publication of text or reproduction of that of previous X
- [X] discussion, without Greek text
- +X discussion with proposal for reading different from that of previous X, but without complete Greek text
- *X presentation of complete text, different from that of previous X

I also follow the Leiden Convention: pointed brackets embrace letters supplied, not altered, by the editor. Dimensions are in meters.

The tablets of SGD themselves have continued to accumulate bibliography. In Appendix I, I list what further discussions of them I have noticed, either new or inadvertently omitted from SGD.

A plea to future editors of new curse tablets. Please tell where they are housed and can be examined and photographed: an editio princeps is only a beginning.

TEXT: Incompletely read; entire (?) text, in 19 lines, apparently in dactylic hexameter. First verse, Δέμονες οἴτινες ἔσθε καὶ οἴτινες ἐνθάδε κείθε, much like openings of invocations of dead in DTAud 22–37, Δέμονες οἱ κατὰ γῆν κὲ δέμονες οἴτινες ἔστε (Amathous, Roman Imp.). Phrases in Rhodian text suggest ritual lament: “grave,” “wailings,” “libations” for dead, “hot tears” of mourners, “hair” cut from heads with “sharp knife.”
